As we've covered before, fintech is one of the most exciting new areas in finance, and thus it's not surprising that one startup is looking to capitalize on the opportunity. MoneyLion, a new fintech startup, has announced the launch of FundLion, a crypto-focused investment service. The service allows users to connect with "hundreds of experienced fintech partners" and follow "exclusive industry" news on the platform. You can also follow specific fintech projects, and if you want, you can invest alongside them. An investment matching technology helps companies make sure that the projects on the platform are high-quality and focused on fintech projects and markets. The company's self-described mission is to make "the financial system for the global crypto-economy." The fintech start-up had drawn attention after launching a pre-ICO, which attracted investors to the platform. MoneyLion is now seeking to raise $2.5 million in a token sale that ends on March 27. One of the founders of MoneyLion, Kory Withers, said in a blog post announcing the upcoming FundLion app: "Since launching our pre-ICO in January 2017, we've been listening to feedback from crypto enthusiasts and financial advisers around the world, trying to give them a better place to discover the space. We started down a path to develop a blockchain-based insurance solution, but the market we identified is still too nascent to make progress quickly. We know that crypto assets will continue to see significant investment from the investor community and that is why we've decided to pivot the company to focus on the fintech market." On the fintech app, the team is also looking to connect crypto users to fintech products and services. So far, the projects in the development pipeline include an insurance product that uses blockchain technology, and an integrated UI/UX developer toolkit for fintech projects. Fintech is one of the many areas the team plans to focus on. Apart from FundLion, there is also Fintech One, a platform for fintech services and partners in the U.S. At the moment, the company has a partnership with Coinbase, and it has a working relationship with Refinitiv, the company behind two of the most popular financial data

What's New In?

Link A Link is used to link sections of image together to create a new image file, create new pages in an existing file, or create a thumbnail. All the tools in a given folder share the same Link options. You can use link to generate images that preserve the transparency and opacity of all layers in your image. The Link command lets you link the current image to a new layer in Photoshop. Photoshop then combines the image from both layers into a single file. You can create links that link sections of the same image, or to all layers. You can even link multiple images in a sequence together. Linked: When you link an image, you can designate how the image fits into a file, which allows you to design various page layouts. You can attach the linked image to any page in a document. Linked to the Left: When you link to the left, Photoshop automatically places the linked image on the left page boundary. This option is most useful when working in portrait format in Photoshop. Linked to the Right: This option allows you to design a page layout that includes a linked image on the right page boundary. Linked in Photoshop: This option allows you to provide more control over how linked images are attached to pages. Instead of being attached to the page automatically, the linked image is attached to a layer. You can control where the linked image is placed on the page, and whether you want the image to fill the page, or be placed against the page boundary. You can also place the linked image in the center of the page, and even scale it proportionally. Embed: An image file can be placed on a page and made to be an actual element of a page. The entire image file is part of the page. When placed on the page, the embedded image doesn't appear on the layer tree, nor does it appear on the Layers panel. The Embed option can be particularly useful when you want to place a logo or other graphic on a page. To embed an image file: Open the image you want to embed. Open the Embed dialog box: Right-click on an image in the Layers panel and choose Embed: In the Embed dialog box: Click the arrow at the top of the Image menu to choose an image file you want to embed. Choose a name for the
